HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY 1670 - 2nd MAY - 1920

SOUVENIR OF THE

250TH

ANNIVERSARY DINNER

TO THE

LONDON STAFF

CHARLES V. SALE, ESQ.,
DEPUTY GOVERNOR
IN THE CHAIR

PRINCE'S HOTEL, ST JAMES', S.W.

MONDAY, 3rd MAY, 1920.

IN CELEBRATION 1670 - 2nd May - 1920

On May 2nd, 1670, Prince Rupert, grandson of King James I., received at Whitehall, from the hands of King Charles II., a Charter, signing away a territory more than half as large as Europe. It was the Charter granted to "The Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay."

To commemorate the 250th anniversary, the Governor and Committee and the London staff of the Company met at the Royal Institute, St. James', London, S.W., on Monday, May 3rd, 1920. In the absence of the Governor, Sir Robert Kindersley, then in Canada in connection with the celebrations there, Mr. Charles V. Sale, the Deputy Governor of the Company, occupied the chair, and in proposing the toast of The King said:—

The first Governor of the Company, Prince Rupert, was the grandson of King James I. The Charter, by virtue of which we assemble to-night, was granted by King Charles II. James Duke of York was the second Governor of the Company, and only resigned office on ascending the throne as King James II.

The Royal connection ceased long ago, but during the centuries the Hudson's Bay Company has lived and prospered under a form of Government of which the Monarchy has been the abiding centre.

This continuity has imparted a stability to British institutions, contributing much to the happiness and advancement of the nation. It is maintained in the person of our present Sovereign who, by character, example and precept, has renewed and strengthened the feelings of affection and duty in the hearts of his subjects. So that it may still be said, as it was said of old, "that the throne is supported by Love as well as by Power."

Ladies and Gentlemen, I ask you, remembering all we owe to the Kingly office, to drink, and to drink with all heartiness, the health of His Most Gracious Majesty, King George the Fifth.

Groseilliers on board sailed in the Nonsuch, a ketch of 40 tons burden, with 42 men, to find some trade in furs—is still existent. It is the same spirit which has been displayed so often during the past five years, when not only the perils of the sea had to be faced, but those of the submarines also. Time will not permit of more than a passing reference to a few of the men who rendered valuable service to the company. Foremost among these are: Governor Semple, who was murdered by the adherents of the North-West Company whilst acting in the discharge of his duty; Sir James Douglas, governor of Vancouver Island and chief factor of the company; Samuel Hearne, the explorer of the Coppermine River; Alex. MacKenzie, the explorer of the river that bears his name; Sir George Simpson, who, as resident governor of the company in Canada, organised and consolidated the company's trade and harmonised the hostile elements in the Hudson's Bay and North-West Companies; Dr. Rae, who took a leading part in the Franklin search expedition; David Thompson, the astronomer; Ballantyne, the author, who wrote such delightful books for boys; and, last and greatest of all, our late Governor, Lord Strathcona, who entered the service of the company as a youth, worked his way through every grade until he became resident governor of the company in Canada, and ultimately Governor of the company—a position he occupied for 25 years.

It was Lord Strathcona who, as Donald A. Smith, handled the Riel Rebellion of 1869 with such masterful ability that it was an almost bloodless revolution. It was he who believed in the future greatness of Canada. It was he who concluded the arrangement by which the company's holdings throughout the fertile belt were distributed.

Another name we should honour is that of Mr. James Thomson, and I mention this particularly to call the attention of the younger members of the staff to the fact that at the present time it is possible for a man to rise from the lowest to the highest rung of the ladder. Mr. Thomson entered the service of the company as a junior clerk, and after experience in the fur trade and stores departments became manager of the British Columbia district. At a later date he was appointed to the position of land commissioner, and when the exigencies of the times demanded it he was also given charge of the affairs of the fur trade. He will retire from the service as soon as the 250th anniversary celebrations are completed, when he will take his seat as a member of the advisory committee in Canada, the highest honour the board could confer on him.

With such traditions before them I am quite sure that the staff of the present day will seek to emulate their example and do their utmost for the continued welfare and prosperity of the company.

The same spirit which impelled Samuel Hearne to trace the Coppermine River, and which animated that marvellous astronomer David Thompson (who joined the company from the Greycoat School as an apprentice clerk for service at Fort Churchill) to survey and place on the map practically every geographical feature of British North America as it now appears, is impelling men of our generation to seek out fresh sources from which fur can be obtained. Mr. Cantley, whom some of you had the pleasure of meeting in London recently, is on such an expedition and glorying in the prospect of a tussle against the forces of nature and also against any threatened opposition. Mr. Drew and Mr. Elphick have recently set out for the Caucasus, an adventure in an entirely different quarter of the globe from that in which the company's operations have hitherto been conducted. It was that same spirit which strengthened Mr. Delf and Mr. Small in their determination to maintain the company's prestige at Archangel when the British Government were urging everyone to clear out of Russia.

The company took a leading part in the Kara Sea Expedition last year, in connection with which Capt. Mikkelborg did such excellent work. Mr. Hoogendijk has gone out to Russia, in spite of the Bolshevik upheaval, to commence operations in the Great and Little Tundras of North Russia. Then we are honoured this evening with the presence of Count Berg, who is associated with us in a new adventure and is shortly leaving for Kamchatka. I am sure we wish one and all of these adventurers god-speed, good luck, and a safe return.

Just a few words more.

This is the first occasion on which a company has attained its 250th anniversary. The East India Company, the first of the chartered companies, has ceased to exist. The New River Company has lost its identity. The Hudson's Bay Company is not only in existence, but possesses greater vitality now than at any previous period in its history. The staff are proud to be associated with it. I will now give you the toast, and I will couple with it the name of Mr. Charles V. Sale, our Deputy-Governor.

Speech by Mr. Charles V. Sale

Deputy Governor

R. INGRAMS, Ladies and Gentlemen,—On behalf of the Governor and Company of Adventurers of England, trading into Hudson's Bay, I thank you for the generous terms in which this toast has been proposed and for the heartiness and enthusiasm with which it has been carried. This is indeed a memorable occasion—the celebration of an incident which, taking place 250 years ago, has affected and directed the lives of countless people through many generations—the present hour and circumstance bringing us together not far from the place where the founders of the company met to receive from King Charles II. the signature which gave form and substance to their venture.

Although the past always combines in every act with the present, it is not often that the connection can be traced between an event in our own lives and another event so far distant in point of time. How much has happened in that long span between 1670 and 1920! The two dates linked together by the fact that though its members, its officers, its servants, have changed time and time again, the company still continues in the same business under the same form of direction and with the same spirit of adventure in the face of difficulties.

The immediate object of the venture was the "finding of some trade in furs," and the company's steadfast pursuit of this purpose is proved by the proud position which it holds as the leader in what is still the leading fur market of the world—the city of London. But the adventurers were men of vision and enterprise, and, as true merchants should, looked beyond their immediate profit to yet greater attainments, such as the discovery of a new passage into the South Sea, and, as King Charles expresses it in the charter, "to the finding of minerals and other considerable commodities by means whereof there may probably arise great advantage to Us and our kingdoms."

It has been said that "Trade is an instrument in the hands of that friendly Power which works for us in our own despite. We design it thus and thus; it turns out otherwise and far better." The quest for the passage to the South Seas proved fruitless, but it led to the Red River settlement, the discovery of the Pacific Coast and the exploration of the regions between the two oceans, so that for some years prior to 1870 the company, in addition to being the owners and rulers of the original Rupert's Land granted under the charter, exercised similar rights in the vast regions lying to the West and North-West.

In the year 1870 these powers of Government and many of the accompanying rights and privileges were transferred to the newly-formed Dominion of Canada, which at that time consisted only of the three provinces of Ontario, Quebec and New Brunswick. In this manner was fulfilled the anticipation of King Charles as expressed in the charter, "by means whereof there may probably arise great advantage to Us and our kingdoms." Without the regions acquired and held for the Crown by the Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay, during the first two centuries of their existence, the Dominion of Canada would not hold the rank and position in the Councils of the Empire which she holds to-day.

The consideration received by the company for the surrender of these vast territories and privileges appeared at the time to be very inadequate, but the company has never exploited its powers, whether political, military or commercial, to their full limit. Its motto is "Pro Pelle Cutem," usually interpreted "A skin for a skin." In practice it has been interpreted "Live and let live," and in my opinion it is this policy of moderation and fairness which accounts for its continued existence and vitality while other and more powerful institutions of like nature have disappeared or lost their identity. However this may be, the company's trade in Canada has continued to grow and has grown most in the Western Provinces, in which the pioneers of the company played so great a part. The city of Winnipeg, founded on the site of Fort Garry, with its wide avenues, stately buildings and commercial activity, the greatest centre of the Western Provinces, with all the promise of infinite growth and development, has now become the chief centre of the company's operations in Canada, with ramifications extending throughout the Dominion.

GREETINGS TO SIR ROBERT KINDERSLEY.

Not only in the city of Winnipeg, but in every city, town, village and post, wherever the company conducts its trade, this 250th anniversary is a great event and is being celebrated with much enthusiasm. There is in all men a natural sentiment in favour of age, and the occasion appeals very strongly to our kindred overseas, to whom the flag of the company represents the dawn of their history as a people. For that among other reasons the principal celebrations of this anniversary are taking place in Canada under the auspices of the Governor, Sir Robert Kindersley, G.B.E., who, as you know, arrived in Winnipeg a few days ago. May I read a cablegram sent on your behalf on Saturday:

"SIR ROBERT KINDERSLEY, G.B.E., Hudson's Bay Company, Winnipeg.—The Deputy-Governor and committee and the members of the London staff send cordial greetings to the Governor, the advisory committee, and the members of the Canadian staff on the occasion of the celebration of our 250th anniversary. These celebrations remind us of the high traditions set by our predecessors in the service, and should help us in striving to emulate their loyalty and devotion to the interests of our great and glorious company."

I am sure you will agree with and confirm these sentiments.

The following answer has just been received:

"On the occasion of the celebration of the 250th anniversary of our great company I send hearty greetings to the directors and staff in London. Our company is to-day still only on the threshold of a great career, which will inevitably be stimulated and guided by the splendid achievements of the past. But whatever the future holds, I am confident that the company and those connected with it will uphold its splendid traditions, which are the outcome and the expression of loyal service and integrity.—ROBERT KINDERSLEY (Governor)."

So far I have been speaking of the company as a whole. Now a few words concerning ourselves, the servants of the company. May I say in passing that the title is one of which we should be proud, it has its roots in history, it means so much. It takes us back to the days of chivalry, to the days of William of Wykeham, when personal service was regarded as the foundation of society, the basis of all education. The ideal was quaintly expressed centuries later by a writer of the days of King Charles.

"The love and service of our country consisteth not so much in the knowledge of those duties which are to be performed by others, as in the skilful practise of that which is done by ourselves."

The records of the company prove that the traditions of that time have been handed down from generation to generation even to the present day. In striving, as I am sure we shall, to follow them in the same way, I am sure we cannot do better than hold fast to the old-time style, "The Servants of the Company."

The outstanding fact that we are still "carrying on" after a lapse of 250 years is a striking tribute to what I have just said and to the loyalty, the devotion and the integrity of our predecessors. Some have given their lives in furthering the company's interests and protecting its property. Others have made great sacrifices for the sake of duty. All with few exceptions have given of their best, and this spirit still survives.

by the character, ability and goodwill of the individuals associated in conducting and carrying on its operations. Each one, however small his (or her) part may appear to be, is, in every moment, making or marring the effect of the whole.

In our case, if I may continue the metaphor, the sturdy oak and sombre pine, the beech and the silvery birch, now arrayed in all the freshness of spring, the youngest sapling, all alike combine to make the future of the forest full of promise and afford a happy augury for the next cycle in its history.

As we are celebrating the birthday of the company I do not propose, as I might do on another occasion, to make special mention of any particular name in responding to the toast proposed by Mr. Ingrams on your behalf. It would be a task of exceptional difficulty where the level of merit has been so remarkably high. I do think, however, you will agree with me that we ought at this time to remember those who died that we might live:

G. F. Beach.	R. W. Cochran.	H. G. Risbridger.
W. J. Beak.	T. H. Doe.	J. H. Salter.
A. A. Bundey.	H. E. Jones.	J. W. Welch.

"Their name liveth for evermore."

I think also you would like me to name those of our company who have fought in the common cause in various ways during these last years, some on the battlefield, some on the seas, and some in the air:

Yet others have been engaged in distant ventures on behalf of the company in circumstances of danger demanding personal courage and resource of the same quality as that shown by those who first carried the company's flag across the ocean, but these have been mentioned by Mr. Ingrams.

I have already alluded to the faithful and devoted work of the company's servants. There are many men in the older branches of our trade, the collection and the sale of furs, the trading posts, the land department and the head office at Winnipeg, who have been with us for long periods of time—some from their earliest days.

The Governor and committee decided to express the company's appreciation to these old servants at this time by the issue of medals, and I am sure you will be interested to know the numbers which are being distributed:

56 silver medals for service between		15 and 19 years
29 silver medals with 1 bar for service between		20 and 24 years
17 silver medals with 2 bars for service between .		25 and 29 years
15 gold medals for service between		30 and 34 years
26 gold medals with 1 bar for service between		35 and 39 years
11 gold medals with 2 bars for service between .		40 and 44 years
7 gold medals with 3 bars for service between .		45 and 49 years
2 gold medals with 4 bars for service between .		50 and 54 years
I gold medal with 5 bars for service of	1 %	57 years

It is my good fortune to present some of these medals this evening, and I will ask those who are entitled to them to come to the front:

MR. INGRAMS, it affords me great pleasure to give to you, on behalf of the Governor and committee, a gold medal as a token of our appreciation of 33 years' faithful service. As secretary of the company you hold a very important office and are the repository of its traditions. I am desired to express to you the thanks of the Governor and committee for the manner in which you have upheld those traditions and especially for the way in which you have furthered the interests of the company during the period of the war, with a very inadequate staff and for a long time under conditions of great physical suffering. We hope you may long be spared to continue in the company's service.

MR. SEWELL, I am glad to have the opportunity of acknowledging, on behalf of the Governor and committee, eighteen years of excellent service, and in giving you this silver medal I wish you every possible happiness in the future.

MR. OLLIS, I am glad to have the opportunity of acknowledging, on behalf of the Governor and committee, nineteen years of excellent service, and in giving you this silver medal I wish you every possible happiness in the future.

MR. COPPING, on behalf of the Governor and committee I give you this gold medal with one bar to represent the acknowledgment and appreciation of 38 years' most excellent work. It is a great pleasure to thank you in this public manner for the faithful performance of duty during so many years.

MR. RENDALL, this is the last presentation which I have to make to-night, and I have left it to the last for a very special reason. This year marks the lapse of a full century since your grandfather became a servant of the company. He was followed by your father in the year 1856, and 36 years have passed since you trod in his footsteps, making a total to date of 138 years' service for the three generations. While we of the committee are proud of the company, we are prouder still of the men who, by their loyalty, fidelity and integrity, have made this anniversary possible. We are grateful to you, and personally I feel it a privilege to be able to give you this gold medal with one bar as a testimony of the company's regard.

Ladies and gentlemen, I am afraid I have taxed your patience in speaking at such length, but I wished you to take away to-night some idea of the nature of the heritage which we of this company have received from those who have preceded us in its service.

On behalf of the Governor and Committee I thank you for the spirit of cheerful, willing devotion to duty shown by each and all, without exception, during the very trying and strenuous period from which we are just emerging. We wish you every happiness and blessing in the future.

Medals have been presented by the Governor and Committee to express the Company's appreciation of the faithful and devoted work of their older servants, both here and in Canada:
